Interview Opportunity

New, independent study shows: Despite the higher costs of Solar PV power generation, the net impact to the average Ontario household will be the equivalent of less than 1% of their electricity bills each year – less than the cost of one Tim Horton's donut per month.

Co-Founder of ClearSky Advisors, Tim Wohlgemut is available in Toronto for interviews and can speak to the following points:

- Economic Impacts of Solar energy in Ontario
- Job creation by Electricity generation type
- Cost to create jobs by Electricity generation type
- Costs and Benefits of Solar Energy

“When you consider the economic impacts of solar, it is clear that it creates far more jobs than any other energy source while also decreasing health and environmental costs. Solar energy does, however, cost more to ratepayers than the alternatives,” says Tim Wohlgemut, Co-Founder of ClearSky Advisors. “The question to Ontario households is whether the job creation, lessened environmental impact and reduced healthcare expenses are worth the additional costs to their electricity bill.”
